Summer Reading List
Grades 5 through 8
2006

Dear Parents,

Summer reading is part of life at Nichols. In addition to developing and extending skills, it is important that students experience the pleasure of discovery, reflection, and imagination that a good book provides.

Summer reading is used to review, supplement, or introduce content that will be part of the regular school year. Middle School students are asked to read a minimum of five books: the required book(s) plus the students' own selections.

This booklet contains both a list of required books for each grade level and a variety of other summer reading choices. The books in this list are divided into Middle Reader books, which are appropriate for all middle school students and Young Adult books, which contain challenging vocabulary and more mature subject matter. The titles are suggestions, but please encourage your child to select at least one title marked with an asterisk. These multicultural books deal with a wide variety of characters and settings, and should serve to expand your child's reading experience.

Students do not need to write summer book reports, but must be prepared to discuss and write compositions about the books during the first weeks of school in September. Please have your child record the titles and authors of all books read over the summer on the record sheet that they will be given in English class, and sign your name when each book is completed. This form is due on the first day of school. Please talk with your child about how to make reading a part of his or her summer plans.

Sincerely,

Carol Sue Stapleton
Middle School Librarian

This year we have added non-fiction books to our summer reading list because many readers enjoy true stories and factual information. There are many different subjects covered in non-fiction books; please feel free to choose a title from an area that interests you. This is only a starting point.
